

26 NAMES ADDED

mortals at the University of New York.

POE GETS PLACE AT LAST

Statesmen, Poets, Sculptors, Inventors Among Those Honored With Niches.

University Heights yesterday added twenty-six names to its bronze roster of America's immortals. All had been "tagged" for the posthumous honor in due course by the board of electors of the Hall of Fame of New York University. And yesterday, under smiling skies, 3,500 spectators gathered on the campus to see the grave and statuesque galaxy of those who already enjoyed their niche in New York's Pantheon in the act of initiating their neophytes.

Before the initiatory rites began the electors, in conference assembled, adopted some important recommendations which go from them for final action to the senate of the university.
One of these was in line with the breaking down of the last constitutional barrier differentiating between the rights of men and women. Notable women already are among the elect in the Hall of Fame, but hitherto they have been voted for separately and, as in the old Quaker meeting houses, they have had their own segregated corner in the sacred circle of the immortals. The electors now recommend that in future men and women shall be voted for upon equal terms and that their tablets shall not be segregated in the Hall of Fame.

The electors also recommended the extension of the period which must elapse before a candidate may become eligible to the Hall of Fame from ten years after death, as at present, to twenty-five years.

Ceremony an Imposing One.

With these preliminaries and a largely attended luncheon disposed of, the ceremony of the unveiling of the tablets immortalizing the names of the twenty-six neophytes began at 3:30 in the afternoon. There was a procession, ponderous with the dignity of academic gowns and learned degrees, but colorful with the varied hues of the doctors' hoods under the quilted warmth of which scores of university dignitaries perspired patiently. The column moved from the Gould Library to the Hall of Fame, where the tablets were unveiled successively, beginning with those of the women immortals. In every instance the sponsor for each particular neophyte, Facing Chancellor Elmer E. Brown, author, members of the faculty, the Senate, electors and council of the university, stated briefly the achievements and claims of his candidate. The chancellor then formally accepted each into the company of the elect, the band executed a fanfare of trumpets and the flag covering the face of the tablet was withdrawn.

On the west lawn, facing the Hall of Fame, had been erected a huge marquee with a platform at one end. There the assemblage gathered at the end of the actual unveiling. Chancellor Brown presided and presented as the orators of the day Dr. Henry Van Dyke, sometime Minister to the Netherlands, whose tablet was "Fame," and Dr. William Milligan Sloane, president of the American Society of Arts and Letters, who spoke on "Inspiration."

The President's Letter.

A letter was read from President Harding to Chancellor Brown, in which the President wrote:
"It is most pleasing to know that the custom of formally unveiling new tablets in the Hall of Fame is to be resumed and I want to congratulate you on the fact. As your letter said, 'The war and other intervening conditions have interfered with the placing of tablets for a considerable time.' I think we may all agree that, at any rate, the war has furnished us with new names and new inspirations deserving of places in the galaxies of fame, and I cannot too earnestly emphasize my hope that they may in due time achieve the recognition which we all appreciate so much."

Hall of Fame elections are held every fifth year. When the fifth of the series was held in 1920 seven names were chosen, among them that of one woman, Alice Freeman Palmer, educator. The men named then, whose tablets also were unveiled yesterday, were Samuel Langhorne Clemens (Mark Twain), author; Roger Williams, preacher and theologian; James Buchanan Eads, engineer; William Thomas Green Morton, physician and surgeon; Patrick Henry, in the class of "rulers and statesmen," and Augustus Saint-Gaudens, sculptor.
The remaining tablets unveiled yesterday were those bearing the names of candidates chosen at elections previous to 1920. Those were George Bancroft, historian; William Cullen Bryant, poet; Edgar Allan Poe, poet; Francis Parkman, historian; James Fenimore Cooper, author; Oliver Wendell Holmes, poet; John Lothrop Motley, historian; Mark Hopkins, educator; Phillips Brooks, preacher and theologian; Louis Agassiz, scientist; Joseph Henry, scientist; Elias Howe, inventor; Daniel Boone, explorer; Rufus Choate, lawyer and jurist; Andrew Jackson, statesman; Alexander Hamilton, statesman; Harriet Beecher Stowe, author; Francis Elizabeth Willard, reformer, and Charlotte S. Cusham, actress.
Elihu Root, representing the Century Association, stood sponsor for William Cullen Bryant, and Robert Olyphant, representing the Sons of the American Revolution, for Patrick Henry. Julia Arthur unveiled the Charlotte S. Cusham tablet for the Stage Women of America. Lyman Beecher Stowe, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, stood by when Mrs. John Francis Xavier of the National Society of New England women loosed the flag from the tablet commemorating the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."
